GENETIC CARRIER SCREENING CONSENT

You should be certain that you understand the six items listed below. If you are not certain about any of them, please ask your healthcare provider to explain them further before signing this form accepting or declining Genetic Carrier testing.

1. I understand that the decision to be tested for carrier status is completely mine.
2. I understand that the test does not detect all carriers or all diseases.
3. I understand that if I am a carrier, testing the baby's father may help me learn more about the chance that my baby could have a genetic disease.
4. I understand that if one parent is a carrier and the other is not, it is still possible that the baby will have that condition, but that the chance of this is very small.
5. I understand that if both parents are carriers, additional testing can sometimes be done in order to know whether or not the baby will have a genetic disorder.

I understand that this test is generally well covered by insurance but that each insurer is different. I understand there could be a cost involved in testing. I have read and understand the information in this form and:

☐ I do not want Genetic Carrier Testing.

☐ I want Genetic Carrier Testing.

OPTIONS FOR GENETIC SCREENING

Cell-free DNA screening (cfDNA) cfDNA screening (also referred to as non-invasive prenatal testing, NIPT, or non-invasive prenatal screening, NIPS) is a screening test that looks for fragments of baby DNA in mom's serum (blood) to determine if there is a concern for certain chromosome conditions in a pregnancy. All individuals have their own cell-free DNA in their bloodstream. During pregnancy, cell-free DNA from the placenta also enters the mom's bloodstream and mixes with mom's cell-free DNA. The DNA of the placenta cells usually are the same as the chromosomal make-up of the fetus.

cfDNA routinely screens for an extra copy of a part of DNA such as Trisomy 21 (Down syndrome), Trisomy 18 and Trisomy 13. Screening for fetal sex can also be done. It is important to know that cfDNA cannot screen for all chromosome or genetic conditions. Although this test is very accurate, there are times when you would need to do additional testing and this result will be reviewed with you by your provider.

Not all insurance companies are covering this test for low risk women. If you would like, we can provide you with the number to the lab that runs the test to check on the cost. This test can be done any time in the pregnancy after 8 weeks.

First Trimester Screening (Nuchal Translucency)

First trimester screening uses a blood test and a specialized ultrasound to identify pregnancies at an increased risk for Down syndrome, Trisomy 13 and Trisomy 18. This screening is performed between 11 weeks and 13 weeks of pregnancy. The blood test measures two different proteins produced by the pregnancy (PAPP-A and free beta hCG). The specialized ultrasound measures the thickness of the fluid at the back of the fetal neck. A baby with Down syndrome, Trisomy 13, Trisomy 18 and/or some congenital heart defects often has an increased nuchal translucency thickness and/or abnormal protein levels. The protein levels from the blood test and the measurement of the nuchal translucency are then combined with the mother's age-related risk to estimate the risk for Down syndrome, Trisomy 13 and Trisomy 18. This test does not give a firm positive or negative result, but rather gives an idea of how concerned to be about the baby. A negative result gives a risk of a problem about 1 in 10,000 (very low) while a positive result can be very concerning (1 in 5 chance of a problem) or increased risk but still low (1 in 294 chance of a problem). A positive first trimester screen result does not mean that a fetus is affected with Down syndrome, Trisomy 13 or Trisomy 18, but rather indicates that the risk for these conditions is increased over the general population (greater than 1 in 500 babies), and that more testing should be considered.

ALPHA-FETOPROTEIN TEST (AFP)

The alpha-fetoprotein test (AFP) is a blood test given to women in their second trimester of pregnancy, usually between weeks 15 and 20. When a woman is pregnant, alpha-fetoprotein is produced by the fetus and mixes with the mother's blood. Alpha-fetoprotein can be detected in a blood sample taken from the arm. A high level of AFP can be an indication of a neural tube defect (problem with the baby's brain or spinal cord) such as spina bifida.

CONSENT

After reviewing the above and discussing with the physician I have consented to the following tests/procedures understanding that Far Hills OB/GYN, Inc. and Jennifer A. Smith OB/GYN LLC is not responsible for the cost of these procedures.

Accept	Decline	Test Name
		Cell-Free DNA (If you choose to have cfDNA you do not need the nuchal translucency)
		Nuchal Translucency with Biochemistry
		Maternal Serum Alpha-fetoprotein

SCHEDULE OF DISABILITY TIME

MATERNITY LEAVE: Leave begins at the time of delivery unless indicated otherwise due to complications.

Six weeks are allowed from the date of delivery for a vaginal delivery. We will complete Family and Medical Leave Act forms if you choose to extend your time off and your employer allows such.

Eight weeks are allowed for a Cesarean Section, however, not all disability companies will pay for the extra two weeks. Check with your disability company to obtain their policies.

We will complete FMLA forms if you choose to extend your time off and your employer allows.

SURGERIES: When looking at time off, the day of the procedure is included in the day count.

Disability Forms: There is a $25.00 charge (payable at the time you provide the form) for each disability form to be completed. Disability forms are not completed until the surgery has been performed and forms for deliveries are completed when patient is started on disability or after delivery. We require three days from the date that we receive your form for us to have it fully completed. If your employer requires these forms prior to delivery and you do not have a scheduled date we will use your estimated due date. It will then be your responsibility to contact your employer with the actual delivery date.

Family Leave Forms Or Any Other Required Forms: There is a $25.00 charge (payable at the time you provide the form) for each family leave form or other required forms to be completed for you or a family member. For pregnancy, these forms can be completed as soon as your point of disability becomes known. For surgery, these forms are completed after surgery is performed. If you require a letter giving the date of surgery and estimated time off, we can provide this beforehand at no charge. We do require three days from the time we receive your form for completion.
